SEPTA could eliminate nine lines under plan

Doomsday. SEPTA officials fear the worst if funding doesn't come through.

If the state doesn't allocate more money to public transit, SEPTA's current routes could drastically change.

Joseph Casey, SEPTA's general manager, testified Thursday in front of the state Senate Transportation Committee, producing two very revealing maps — SEPTA's current transit routes, and a map that shows the possible elimination of nine rail lines, the closure of a subway line and the conversation of trolley routes to bus routes.

"It's real," Casey said. "It's not fabricated. It's what the price of inaction is."

A bill that would provide more than $500 million — enough to maintain — was passed in the state Senate in June, before summer recess. The bill has yet to move forward in the House.

Officials say the plan could leave nearly 90,000 daily riders without rail service. Bridges are in poor condition, subway cars are aging and other new vehicles are needed, Casey said.

"We have a backlog of repairs of $5 billion," Casey said. "That's with equipment and facilities well past their useful life. Under the current funding scenario, the capital program we have is $300 million. As that proceeds over the next 10 years, that $5 billion will grow to $6.5 billion."

The realignment plan won't be rolled out immediately, but parts of it could happen as early as next year. The Cynwyd line could be eliminated in 2014, followed by Media/Elwyn in 2015 and Chestnut Hill West in 2018. West Trenton, Airport, Warminster, Wilmington/Newark, Fox Chase and Chestnut Hill East lines would close eight years after that.

It sounds too far away to worry about now, but Casey reassures, it's not.

"Power sub stations — if they go out, there's no money now," he said.

It's not a wish list, he added; it's what SEPTA needs now. "Hopefully the House gets their act together and tries to pass a bill," Casey said. "I just don't know if it will happen."

Other services that would be affected include: truncating service on the Lansdale/Doylestown Line by 2018 and the Paoli/Thorndale Line by 2023 and suspending service on the Broad-Ridge Spur of the Broad Street Line and eliminating all express service on the BSL.

LGBT. Judge orders MontCo to stop with same-sex marriages

A Pennsylvania judge has ordered a Montgomery County court official to stop issuing marriage licenses to gay couples.

In an opinion issued Thursday, Pennsylvania Commonwealth Court President Judge Dan Pellegrini wrote that Montgomery County Register of Wills Bruce Hanes did not have the power to decide on his own whether the state's ban on gay marriage was unconstitutional.

The state's Health Department sued Hanes in August after he began issuing marriage licenses to same-sex couples. Hanes began issuing the licenses after the U.S. Supreme Court in June ruled that the federal government must recognize same-sex unions in states where they are legal.

Pennsylvania Attorney General Kathleen Kane announced that she would not defend the state's ban on gay marriage.

Spokesman Frank Custer said officials there are still reviewing the ruling. They have stopped issuing licenses, he said. REUTERS

Protesters filled Council chambers, calling for full school funding. / RIKARD LARMA, METRO

City Council returns, but so do protesters

Uproar. Calling for more school funding, protesters were quite vocal for Council's first day.

City Council returned Sept. 12 for its first hearing this legislative session — and so did protesters calling for more funding for the city's struggling schools. Advocates interrupted the Council session with an impromptu mic check. Standing in the back of chambers, protesters waved signs and chanted, "$50 million is not enough! Charity is no substitution for full funding!"

The statement was a shot at a plan announced by Mayor Michael Nutter under which the city would partner with private organizations to raise money for school supplies, essentially crowdfunding the School District shortfall.

After several minutes of chaos, the protesters marched out, chanting "We'll be back!"

The rally came despite the fact several Council members brought forth proposals related to the School District budget crisis. Those that sparked the most debate came from Councilman Wilson Goode Jr., who took aim at the city's 10-year property tax abatement on newly constructed or improved properties. Goode last year introduced a bill capping the abatement amount at $500,000 and reducing it during the final five years by 20 percent annually. As a portion of Philadelphia's property taxes go to fund city schools, the legislation would release more revenue.

Goode has several times claimed the tax break benefits largely the "new, few and well-to-do," while developers and real estate organizations contend it draws much-needed development and new residents to the city, broadening its tax base. But that proposal was tabled, as it fell short of the votes necessary for it to pass.

"Needless to say, I will introduce the first abatement bill every week until a vote is taken," Goode said. He also brought forth a second piece of legislation that would extend the property tax abatement indefinitely to all city and School District-owned properties. "The bill asks a simple question," Goode said to fellow Council members. "Do we want to continue taking money from the School District through the abatement program? If you want to stop taking money from the School District, vote 'yes.' If you want to keep taking money from the School District, vote 'no.'"

ALEX WIGGLESWORTH
awigglesworth@metro.us

Legislative roundup

Additional school-related proposals introduced on Sept. 12 include:

- Councilwoman Jannie Blackwell, on behalf of Council President Darrell Clarke, introduced a bill under which the city would give the School District $50 million in exchange for its shuttered properties, which the city would then sell.
- Legislation introduced by Councilwoman Blondell Reynolds Brown calls for hearings to investigate the efficiency of collections of the School Income Tax.
- Councilman Kenyatta Johnson proposed an investigation of the School District's transition plan following the closing last year of 24 city schools.

Drexel gets techy with new school

Innovation. Drexel hopes the college can help decipher and lead high-tech advances.

Generation Joystick, the gobs of young people who fiddle with gadgets and frolic in virtual reality, have forced Drexel University's hand.

The university announced this week plans to add a new school — the College of Computing and Informatics — to foster and address challenges spurred from technological innovation.

"I think society has moved us this way," said David Fenske, who was chosen as the school's dean.

Fenske named three parts — 1) the rapid growth and variety of computing devices, 2) the large amounts of data and misinformation broadcast to people who can't adequately interpret the information, 3) the lack of access to these devices for many Americans — that provided an opportunity for the college to dedicate space to study the impact of technology more in-depth.

"I think these three things have really forced computing and information together in this kind of joined, applied domain," Fenske said.

The new college, which will open next fall, is a consolidation of the College of Information Science and Technology, the Department of Computer Science and the Department of Computing and Security Technology. About 2,200 students are expected to enroll in its inaugural year.

"What I think what we've done here," he said, "is both reflect what happened in society, and to better prepare students to engage in enterprises and innovations of that society."

Another hit. Seaside Park, NJ boardwalk, businesses up in flames

A six-alarm fire that broke out Thursday afternoon inside an ice cream shop on the Seaside Park boardwalk continued to rage well into the night.

The blaze, which began around 2:15 p.m. at the Kohr Brothers Frozen Custard shop, spread to at least 19 other buildings, fanned by high winds.

Seaside Park Police Chief Francis Larken told reporters at least 80 percent of the boardwalk has been destroyed and up to three dozen businesses have been decimated.

Several firefighters and residents were reportedly being treated for smoke inhalation, though no serious injuries were reported as of press time.

Gov. Chris Christie was on location and said at least 400 firefighters were fighting the blaze.

The fire came as the section of the Seaside boardwalk was rebounding from Hurricane Sandy damage it suffered last October. Check www.metro.us for updates.

A NOTE TO OUR RUSSIAN PEN PAL

Dear President Putin,

Thanks for your recent open letter to America regarding Syria. As you know, our plans for possibly visiting your old pal, Bashar al-Assad, are somewhat up in the air, so please tell him not to hold dinner.

I was intrigued by your thoughts on how it can be unwise for big military powers to start throwing their missiles around without the U.N.'s blessing. I assume you are speaking from experience. Ha! Don't spill your borsch; I'm just ribbing you. But in the spirit of offering friendly advice and a little quid pro quo, here are some ideas that you might find useful when you're hanging out in Red Square.

For starters, what's with taking your shirt off all the time? You're a handsome guy (in a sort of former-KGB way) but it seems a tad creepy. Kind of like, "Sure, Russia is a super power. Just look at these guns!" I don't want to take away all your fun, but maybe you could wean yourself from the practice with … oh, I don't know… maybe some sort of mesh tank top?

Quoted

I was intrigued by your thoughts on how it can be unwise for big military powers to start throwing their missiles around without the U.N.'s blessing.

Second, how about burying Lenin? I realize he is an important figure in your country's past, and when I was in Moscow some years ago I eagerly made the trek to his tomb. And it was honestly fascinating to see him propped up inside that glass box. But while it's all well and good to turn historical sites into tourist attractions, doing so with historical figures goes a bit too far.

And lastly … how do I say this nicely? Maybe you could go a little easier on the offering of unsolicited advice, especially that part about telling Americans that their country is not exceptional. I get your point: We're all human beings, all created equal, yadda yadda yadda. But in that very sense, no one likes hearing that he or she is not special. And when those words come from a bare-chested Russian with his own history of international meddling, it's even worse.

Just a few ideas.

Regards,

Tom

Obama says his focus is shifting from Syria to domestic priorities

Health. The White House wants to make sure people lacking insurance sign up Oct. 1.

President Barack Obama said on Sept. 12 he is shifting his focus to domestic priorities from a tense period during which he sought congressional approval to use military force against Syria for its suspected use of chemical weapons.

The president cited the budget, immigration and implementation of his signature health-care legislation as concerns he is turning to.

The administration faces daunting obstacles on all three fronts, and a ticking clock on the budget in particular. Congressional Republicans have sought to eliminate funding for the health law, known as Obamacare, and want the president to agree to spending cuts in exchange for raising the nation's debt limit.

Lawmakers must pass legislation to continue funding for government operations by the end of the month or force a government shutdown. Failure to raise the nation's debt limit after a date expected in mid-October would trigger a debt default. REUTERS

Syria applied to sign up to the global ban on chemical weapons, a major first step in a Russian-backed plan that would see it abandon its arsenal of poison gas to avert U.S. military strikes.

The United Nations said it had received Syria's application to join the Chemical Weapons Convention, shortly after President Bashar al-Assad promised to deliver it within days. REUTERS

On Karl

"Derek" includes a meaty role for Karl Pilkington, the lowly radio producer Gervais turned into a celebrity when he made him the centerpiece — and often focus of ridicule — on his groundbreaking podcast, "The Ricky Gervais Show." He plays Dougie, a longtime worker with a terrible hairdo who's the smartest, most self-aware character on the show — and as such, he's often the most miserable.

Ricky Gervais gets to be (half) serious

Netflix show.
"Derek" shows the comic in a sincere, kind mode — but he's still very funny.

Ricky Gervais plays the titular character on "Derek," a "slow" caretaker at a nursing home who really likes animals. / NETFLIX

Ricky Gervais is a jolly man. He's also a serious man. The two aren't mutually exclusive. His comedy comes from a place of seriousness. It's no accident that his best-known creation, "The Office," is a mockumentary.

His latest show, "Derek," adopts the same approach. But it's markedly different. It's a comedy-drama, centered on Gervais' title character: a "slow" type (certainly autistic, although he's undiagnosed) who works at a nursing home.

"It is more sincere," Gervais says. "I've left behind the veil of irony that inhabits most of my other works. That's what makes it more dramatic. There's this sincerity in the characters."

Derek himself is not David Brent (or even "Extras"' more together, though still troubled Andy Millman).

"We're not laughing at the difference between how [the characters] see themselves and how we see them," Gervais says. "I got addicted to the sweetness and the kindness. I wanted it to be infectious. When [Derek] walks through the door, you're infected by kindness."

What it most shares with his past work is an interest in nobodies. "It's about forgotten people and people on the fringes of society. I've always been fascinated by them. It's also nice to return to ordinary people. In recent years I've done a lot of studies of fame and Hollywood," he says, citing "Extras," "Life's Too Short," even a stand-up special called "Fame."

He chose a care home because many of the women in his family worked in them. He had 30 years of stories, some of which made it into the show. He based a character named Hannah on these women. "I wanted her to be strong and caring, like all the womenfolk I knew growing up in my family," Gervais says. "They were very sentimental and they loved kids and animals. But they also had to be lionesses."

The show isn't entirely serious, or even half-serious. It's very often hilarious. "I think that if you're dealing with something that's real, it can go from comedy to drama, then back again," he says. "Real life does that. Comedy is real life with the boring bits taken out."

He was still worried about audience reactions. "You are always aware that [this show] is a challenge to the audience. But it should be," he says. "I don't want the audience to be that comfortable. I want things to worry them. I want them to think about it."

Streaming is the thing

"Derek" debuted on Netflix. (All seven 25-minute episodes were made available Thursday.) Gervais always intended the streaming giant as his home. "I heard a whispering of the industry that some cable networks were getting worried about this new kid on the block called Netflix. That excited me," Gervais says with his trademark giggle. He emailed the head of Netflix, saying he wanted to make a show. He got a quick reply with a go. "TV habits have changed so much in the last 10 to 15 years," he explains. "There's a generation of kids who don't understand this concept of the common consciousness — of sitting down at 9 on a Thursday with the family. 'I don't have to watch it then; I can watch it on the way to the store tomorrow.'"

Kendra up on high for season two

TV. The Playmate-turned-house bunny gears up for another season of "Kendra on Top."

Kendra Wilkinson-Baskett has dominated reality television since 2005 — and she's still got more to give. "Kendra on Top" will return for season two on WE tv this Friday, Sept. 13.

The move from the show "Kendra" on E! to "Kendra on Top" on WE tv gave Wilkinson-Baskett the chance to re-brand herself. "Our goal was to reintroduce Kendra again, in a different light," she says. "Season one was about finding a career, being a parent, being a wife — kind of reintroducing me under another network, and reminding people who I am."

But season two will dive right in. "My audience understands where I'm at now; we're pretty much up-to-date with everything," Wilkinson-Baskett says. "This season is not about me being a parent or about me being married. It's about being a human being, the struggles of what that means and how I get through it."

According to Wilkinson-Baskett, those struggles are real. "This is the most organic show you can get," she says. "Sure, we have creative little tie-ins. But the overall story is 100 percent my life. I would never tell someone else's story or have anybody else's words in my mouth."

Why such a strong commitment to the reality of reality TV? "I find it very therapeutic to be able to tell my story, and not hide it," she says. "We've been shooting season two of 'Kendra On Top' for about a year now. There's a lot that goes on in a year. Everybody goes through spurts. There are some people who hide those spurts and blow up later. But I'm an open book."

What are some of those "spurts" for Kendra? As husband Hank Baskett develops his career at his Los Angeles gym, Athletic Gaines, tensions run high. "There's an episode where you'll get a chance to see what happens when his business mixes with my business, and it ends up not being such a great thing," she says. "It ends up being a complete disaster. You'll get a chance to see how we get through it, together."

Despite their professional differences, Wilkinson-Baskett remains supportive of her hubby's career. "The gym is really the most amazing place ever, " she says. "They're specialized in personal training and making sure you get to your goal safely and fast."

But her pride for Hank is trumped by pride for little Hank. "We're very lucky to have a son like him," she says of her 3-year-old. "It's natural to compare yourself with other parents, and I find myself patting myself on the back. We are creating an amazing human being!"

Wilkinson-Baskett admits to a precarious relationship between parenting life and her televised life. "We're respectable people," she says. "We have a lot of parenting friends from preschool, and we have to warn them to be aware of what they see. This is a crazy season, a little dramatic. You know how they say behind closed doors, people are a certain way? Behind closed doors for us is actually on TV. People are seeing our true dirt."

TV newbies this fall

The idiot box.
Networks have a whole new rash of shows this season, many of which will never be heard from again.

James Spader returns to TV as a baddie hero in "The Blacklist."
DAVID GIESBRECHT, NBC

'Hostages': Because television is now largely single stories that never end, this drama takes a movie plot — Toni Collette is kidnapped by a rogue fed (Dylan McDermott) and forced to try and kill the president — and will somehow stretch that over untold seasons.
Sept. 23, 10 p.m., CBS

'Masters of Sex': Biopics are always too short to capably encapsulate full, messy lives, so hopefully this show about pioneering sex researchers Masters and Johnson — respectively, William (Michael Sheen) and Virginia (Lizzy Caplan) — will fare better than "Kinsey."
Sept. 29, 10 p.m., SHO

'Super Fun Night': ABC is betting big bucks on this Rebel Wilson-starring comedy. Wilson plays a lawyer whose weekly girls night gets thrown for a loop when she gets promoted.
Oct. 2, 9:30 p.m., ABC

Must see

'The Blacklist'

Holy crap, James Spader's 53 (but slightly less doughy). The professional creep is happily enjoying a resurgence, playing the villain in the next "Avengers" movie, and returning to TV as a criminal who plays rat to the feds — but possibly for his own agenda.

Two steps forward, one step back

Horror sequel. The good will James Wan amassed after "The Conjuring" lasted about two months.

Patrick Wilson and creepy ghosts return for "Insidious: Chapter 2."
MATT KENNEDY

Review

'Insidious: Chapter 2'

Director: James Wan

Stars: Patrick Wilson, Rose Byrne

Rating: PG-13

Director James Wan has made great strides in atoning for his debut, "Saw." Starting with "Insidious" and continuing with this July's "The Conjuring," he's been honing his craft, reviving a dormant sub-genre — the haunted house picture — and bringing back old-school, wholly analogue frights. There are no digital effects in either film — just prowling camerawork, creaking floorboards, practical effects … and the occasional, unfortunate boo.

Following two mighty steps forward, "Insidious: Chapter 2" is that fabled step back. It takes the series in the wrong direction: from simple (if mildly convoluted) ghost movie to deep, borderline impenetrable mythology. Did you know there was a backstory to the ghoul that latched onto the Lamberts? Did you really need to learn more about that alternate spirit world, depicted as somewhere between the Black Lodge on "Twin Peaks" and a rural haunted house in Nowhere, America, complete with excess fog machines?

This time, it's Dad (Patrick Wilson) who's troubled. At the end of the first, he seemed to be possessed by a homicidal demon, who strangled the token creepy psychic hero (Lin Shaye). The second installment picks up from there, with Mom (Rose Byrne) and Wilson's own mom (Barbara Hershey) very, very slowly realizing that he's no longer who he once was, and may be pretty good with a knife.

There's a great sequel in here somewhere, but the script is a jumble of exposition. More important, it doesn't — like "The Conjuring" — give Wan much chance to show off. He's too busy with plot to really dig into scenes. It assumes what we want is a deeper understanding (superficially speaking) of its world. What we need is more chances to gnaw on our nails. Perhaps that will be "Chapter 3," leaving this the traditional doughy middle in the franchise.

Music inspired by the wind

The choir kicks off its season with "Canticles of the Holy Wind."
STEVEN HYDER

Composer John Luther Adams, called "one of the most original thinkers of the new century" by The New Yorker magazine, has lived in Alaska for the last 35 years, an environment often reflected in his music. Calling to talk about Adams and his newly commissioned work for Philly choir The Crossing last week, conductor Donald Nally was enjoying some end-of-summer time at the beach.

The two landscapes couldn't be more different, but the mere fact of their proximity to nature links them to the concert-length work that The Crossing will premiere this weekend.

"I'm really interested in John's music and language," Nally says. "He's always describing our natural world, and I'm really interested in music that references or reaches out to the natural world. It seems to indicate to me or to magnify the distance that we are from that world in our everyday life. But John lives in a much more remote area where he experiences that world more than I do living in Chicago or Philadelphia."

The new piece, co-commissioned with the Latvian choir Kamer, is titled "Canticles of the Holy Wind" and alternates movements inspired by the sky, the wind, birds and other motifs from nature. Nally describes the 70-minute work as "very atmospheric. It's designed to, over the extended period of a movement, allow you to disappear into your own space. Each movement has an idea that allows you to disappear into your own thinking as it creates a mood that exists and hovers for a while."

The premiere of "Canticles of the Holy Wind" kicks off The Crossing's 2013-2014 season, which will also feature newly commissioned works by Ted Hearne and Gavin Bryars, the latter in conjunction with local saxophone quartet PRISM.

A spooky night at the opera

Suspense. Poe's dark spirit revives the stuffy genre.

Chadwick Somers, baritone, and Michael A. Lienhard, tenor and accordionist, take the stage in "Opera Macabre." / HARISH PATHAK

Picture a night at the opera. Let us guess: large, ornate concert hall, a silver-haired audience adorned in their finery, archaic music on an elaborate stage?

Erase that image from your mind.

"The Philadelphia Opera Collective was founded a few years ago on the basis that opera is not simply empty spectacle or an unrelatable piece of canon that belongs in a museum," says producer and co-founder Michael A. Lienhard. "We believe, in fact, that opera is a living, breathing demonstration of real human emotions."

The POC's latest production is a new opera based on the works of Edgar Allan Poe, premiering tonight — Friday the 13th — as part of the FringeArts festival. The piece is directed by EgoPo Classic Theatre's Brenna Geffers, with music composed by POC co-founder Reese Revak and a libretto culled from Poe's "The Fall of the House of Usher," "The Black Cat" and a selection of his letters on the subject of writing.

Lienhard describes Revak's music as "hauntingly beautiful" during the "Usher" portion, while it takes on a jazz-oriented, almost vaudeville feel for the black humor-laced "Black Cat."

"The pieces are completely dependent upon each other," he says. "'The Black Cat' is so raucous that it needs the languid, gothic style of 'Usher' to balance it out, and vice versa."

FringeArts is the perfect venue for the small company's mission of expanding the reach of the genre, Lienhard says.

"Opera has always been so polished and clean," he explains. "But we work in very intimate spaces, where the opera singers are really in your face. If you wanted to, you could reach out and touch them. You don't need a tuxedo to attend our operas."

Califone alone

In "Stitches." Tim Rutili may have lost his band, but in his travels he picked up a lot of new songs.

Tim Rutili / DUSDIN CONDREN

In his most recent press photos, Califone's Tim Rutili appears alone. His former core of backing musicians have moved on, but Califone's rustic and ramshackle sound remains very much unchanged.

"We haven't played together in a long time," notes Rutili. "Those guys joined Iron and Wine so they could start making some money."

"Stitches," Califone's seventh studio recording, released earlier this month on Dead Oceans, brings Rutili back to a more solitary state of songwriting. Leaving the familiar confines of his Chicago studio for the first time, Califone's founder wrote and recorded his new collection of songs on the road and fleshed them out with various friends and co-conspirators along the way in California, Arizona and Texas.

"It was a new way of doing things, and you can't help but have the way those places look and feel leak into the music. I think not being in Chicago really did affect the way this record sounds. I think it affected it for the better because we needed to take a different approach to these songs. We had the bag of tricks before for sure, but this time we had a new bag of tricks."

Gathering source material on his phone, Rutili turned to his field recordings to create a patchwork of sound collages and musical mosaics to help fill the void left by his veteran collaborators.

"The record was called 'Stitches' when it first started," says Rutili. "And that name stuck. It was like making a big quilt to me. It felt like making a collage from different places and different times. There were a lot of things recorded outside. There's one song with the sound of rain on a roof. I was doing vocals while driving. There's the sound of my neighbor's dogs all over it."

Even with Rutili's new cast of musicians and recording locations, Califone retain their signature sound of avant-Americana. The unmistakable pluck, slide and sustained hum of guitars join together with layers of obscure percussion and atmospheric electronics leading sparse arrangements to culminate in crescendos of controlled chaos while dusty, rusty, disjointed lyrics come to life as a cinematic montage.

"A lot of this songwriting is about articulating things that don't make logical sense," he says. "Treating lyrics that way, and treating music that way can make an intangible feeling, or a feeling you can't articulate, relatable."

Grönemeyer may be the most famous musician you don't know yet. / PROVIDED

Herbert Grönemeyer

Herbert Grönemeyer is the most popular musician in his home country of Germany, having sold more than 13 million albums. But the venues he is playing on his first U.S. tour are decidedly more humble, and he's OK with that.

"You play a certain way in front of people that haven't heard you before," he says. "You have to focus much more on the music and convince the people that night, and it brings you back to the roots where you actually started."

His sharp voice cuts through the fog of dark arrangements on his most recent release, "I Walk," which is sung in English. It may be enough to convince audiences.

On Sunday night, he plays Keswick Theatre (291 N Keswick Ave., Glenside). PAT HEALY

Katherine Heigl's got a bad reputation

Katherine Heigl's reputation is keeping her from working, it seems.

According to several film and TV insiders, Heigl is too difficult and demanding to work with, telling the Hollywood Reporter that casting the former "Grey's Anatomy" actress is "not worth it." A source from her 2010 film "Life as We Know It" says, "She can cost you time every single day of shooting. Wardrobe issues, not getting out of the trailer, questioning the script every single day." And a TV executive says Heigl's reputation kept her out of consideration for a role in a new series. "On many levels, she would have been perfect for the role, but all of us said, 'She's not worth it,'" the exec says.

Poor Katherine Heigl: Charlie Sheen can practically have sex with prostitutes, smoke crack and then beat those prostitutes, all while on set — and get rehired — but having the intelligence to question one line in a script will have you branded for life.

Julie Chen looks a lot different now. / THE TALK

Julie Chen reveals plastic surgery secret

Julie Chen revealed on "The Talk" on Wednesday that as a 25-year-old, she got plastic surgery to make her look less Asian in order to help her career.

Back when she was a local news reporter in Dayton, Ohio, Chen was told by a former boss and an agent that she wouldn't get very far because of her "Asian" eyes.

"He said, 'I cannot represent you unless you get plastic surgery to make your eyes look bigger,'" said Chen about her agent.

She decided to go for it (and, judging by the photo, a lot of other things) saying that after the eyelid surgery, "the ball did roll for me," she said.

Why Mumford & Sons got kicked out of a strip club

You know the rule, guys: no banjo in the champagne room.

Have Mumford & Sons been hanging out with Justin Bieber? They seem like they should be too wholesome to even enter a strip club, let alone get kicked out of one. But that's just what happened Tuesday night, according to TMZ.

Apparently, the band was hanging out at Atlanta's Clermont Lounge, where it was karaoke night. Band member Ben Lovett got up to do some songs and his bandmates tried to film him with their phones, which is another thing you can't do in any room at a strip club.

The DJ dropped the music several times to try to make them stop, resulting in a verbal fracas. In the end, they were asked to leave, which is probably the most badass thing that has ever happened to a group of guys who play mandolins for a living.

We asked about Paltrow — and you replied

Yesterday, I asked readers to write in their conspiracy theories on why Gwyneth Paltrow was so upset that Vanity Fair was planning an article on the actress that she sent out a mass email to her friends and acquaintances asking them to not speak with the mag.

And, as usual, you all replied in hilarious fashion, with @jasonh401 tweeting, "I think Gwyneth knows more about these chemical weapons than she's telling....." while reader Alexis Moore thinks there is something more otherworldly going on. "She's hiding the fact she's an alien," she wrote. But it was Walter Van Der Wahl who hit the nail on the head, saying the squeaky-clean actress is probably hiding "her penchant for thug porn."

Hemsworth's dirty, dirty text

Rumors about Liam Hemsworth stepping out on Miley Cyrus are resurfacing after the star reportedly sent a forward text message to January Jones, according to Us Weekly. "I want to f— you," Hemsworth allegedly wrote to the actress, with whom he was reportedly spotted making out at an Oscars party earlier this year. Hemsworth's rep, insists it's all nonsense. "[It] is entirely fabricated by Us Weekly. There is no truth whatsoever to this tabloid fiction," the rep says in a statement.

Styles' new lady love

Harry Styles has a new lady in his life. The One Direction member has been dating model Cara Delevingne "for around two weeks," according to E! Online. "Harry's been chasing Cara nonstop. He really likes her and has been saying that he wants to be exclusive with her," a source says.

GMOs ruin everything

Re: 'A genetically modified Vampire? No thanks' (Metro, Sept. 12) Thank you for highlighting the lie that is GMO food. Every European knows that the mainstream foods in the U.S. are inferior. In the same vein, most candy bars that you and your kids eat have preservatives, artificial colors, artificial flavors and bad chocolate made from sour milk. The same bars made in Europe have natural colors, natural flavors and really good chocolate. Why? Because manufacturers treat the American customer base with contempt.
BRIAN BECK, VIA EMAIL

No, they don't

Re: 'A genetically modified Vampire? No thanks' (Metro, Sept. 12) Rostam Batmanglij's complaints about modern food, though perhaps well-intentioned, are unfortunately based on serious misinformation.

He complains apples are bigger and more attractive but lack taste. He blames this, ultimately, on GMOs. Nothing could be further from the truth. As far back as 1972, long before genetic engineering was possible, I had bought an apple — huge and beautiful — and about as flavorful as a raw potato. Quite simply, the breeders were going for appearance, where they succeeded, and didn't worry about taste.

I would venture to say that were the apple a GMO, it would be as flavorful as nature intended.

As for Europe? They didn't allow U.S.-grown GMOs until they developed their own. That, of course, is another story.

Backup plan

Foles still getting one reps

Eagles backup QB Nick Foles is getting a limited amount of first-team reps in practices, according to coach Chip Kelly. It's an unorthodox method in the NFL, but Kelly wants to keep Foles fresh in case Mike Vick gets hurt.

Sustaining fun attitude is Kelly's big challenge

NFL. The Eagles are the talk of football, but will the fast-break offense survive all 16 games?

There's a new vibe around the Eagles as they prepare for their home opener. Sports-talk radio lines are lighting up with positive callers following last Monday's thrilling 33-27 victory.

The players keep using the word "fun" to describe — cover your ears, Allen Iverson — practice. And new head coach Chip Kelly has been labeled a genius. While the level-headed Kelly says he ignores the hype, he's got to be expecting a king-like coronation when he leads the Eagles into battle against the Chargers.

"From what I anticipate, from the Philadelphia fans, I know it's going to be — just the one thing that was amazing to me was to hear the Philadelphia fans chanting 'defense' when we were at Washington in that fourth quarter," Kelly said. "That part's going to be exciting."

Kelly has been the talk of the NFL this past week. Every analyst has an opinion. Every player has one, and every armchair quarterback, too. Inside the Eagles' locker room, everyone just wants to get back out on the field.

"He's a great coach," LeSean McCoy said. "[The Washington game] is the first time a lot of guys in the locker room had fun. We couldn't wait to get back out there and have fun."

That attitude of having fun stems from the offense's fast pace. Kelly's teams are literally trying to run opposing teams out of the building with a blitzkrieg of short passing plays and runs. It's the same thing he perfected at Oregon.

The question now is, can that tempo be sustained over the course of a 16-game NFL schedule?

"When we prepared [at Oregon], we had a weekly schedule that we followed almost religiously in terms of when to work and when to recover and whatnot," Kelly said. "So we have a plan in place that we put in place in April that's built for the long haul."

Dawkins keeps giving back to adopted city

NFL. The former Eagles safety was back in town for the 2013 Beyond Sports Summit.

Five years after Brian Dawkins left Philadelphia, the Eagles great is still inspiring hope in the city he once called home.

Dawkins was part of the 2013 Beyond Sports Summit, an event which honors sports as a catalyst for making positive social change in the world.

Speakers at the three-day event included NBA commissioner David Stern, Eagles owner Jeffrey Lurie, former Sixer Dikembe Mutombo, Mayor Michael Nutter and former Pennsylvania Gov. Ed Rendell.

"Where your passion is, is where your gift lies," said Dawkins. "If you're just doing things because you think people would like it, are you really passionate about that? When you have a passion for something and you love it, and love the people you're working with, you're going to go above and beyond with your time, love and care."

No one could ever question those qualities in Dawkins. He partnered with Turkey Hill Ice Cream to donate $1,000 to the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation for every interception he made between 2004 and 2007. In celebration of his twin daughters' first birthday, Dawkins gave $10,000 to the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia Neonatal Intensive Care Unit. In 2009, the NFL awarded him the Walter Payton Man of the Year Award.

"When you talk about team, it should be: 'Together Everybody Achieves More,' T-E-A-M," said Dawkins. "You go through a lot of peaks and valleys in your life. As sports is happening, life is happening, and your team is there to help you through the tough times."

The Eagles retired Dawkins' No. 20 last season. He recorded 898 tackles, 34 interceptions, 32 forced fumbles and 21 sacks in his career with the Birds, while helping lead the franchise to only its second Super Bowl berth.

"When we lost to the Patriots [in the Super Bowl] I told the guys in the locker room," Dawkins recalled, "'You will see me more defined next year. I will be bigger and hopefully faster. I want to make sure that I'm doing everything in this offseason to come back even better next year, and I'm telling you to do the same for yourselves so we can come back and make another run at it.'"

The Eagles never got back to the Super Bowl. They reached the NFC Championship Game in 2008. It was Dawkins' final game as an Eagle, as the team chose to let him walk away via free agency. Yet here he is, walking back into town for charity.

Cleary signing off the table, deal too risky

NHL. The forward chose to remain in Detroit rather than risk getting hurt playing with the Flyers.

Cleary had been set to join the Flyers for the Sept. 12 open to camp.
GETTY IMAGES

Why is Daniel Cleary still a Red Wing rather than a Flyer, as had been speculated all week? Don't blame the player. Blame the system.

Specifically, blame the NHL's silly insistence that players who are under contract but with career-ending injuries remain on their club's active roster until the season gets underway instead of being allowed to retire.

The Flyers — over the NHL's $64 million salary cap — couldn't officially sign the 34-year-old Cleary until placing Chris Pronger on the long-term injury list to clear his $4.9 million hit.

Cleary was supposed to be on the ice at 8:30 a.m. for the Sept. 12 start of training camp. He wouldn't have been paid if he got hurt, since he'd have entered camp on a tryout. Cleary decided that was too big of a risk and signed a one-year, $1.75 million deal to remain in Detroit.

"I heard from Dan's agent late [Sept. 11] that he had just decided to stay with Detroit," Flyers general manager Paul Holmgren said. "I knew that he wanted to be in Detroit. He was hanging around all summer, and things worked out, so good for him."

If there was any animosity on Holmgren's part, he hid it well. He said the decision showed what a character guy Cleary is.

"Obviously, he had deep roots to the Red Wings' organization, and I can't fault him for that."

At least one would-be teammate said the club is better off without Cleary.

"If a guy didn't want to be here and be 100 percent committed to this team, we're better off without him," said defenseman Mark Streit.

If "Juice" Granger gets the start against Fordham, Temple still plans to run a pass-first offense. / GETTY IMAGES

'Juice' could be loose for Temple against Fordham

NCAA. Granger may get the start against Fordham with Reilly injured.

So, it's the other team that plays at the Linc that may be doing the quarterback shuffle. While Mike Vick remains in one piece, the same can't be said about Temple's Connor Reilly.

As if the Owls (0-2) weren't desperate enough for a win when they take on Fordham Sept. 14, Matt Rhule's team may have to take on the Rams (2-0) without Reilly. After being helped off the field with a knee injury in the fourth quarter of Temple's 22-13 loss to Houston on Sept. 7, Reilly somehow made it back onto the field, unsuccessfully trying to rally his troops.

Reilly hasn't practiced since, and he's questionable for the Fordham game, meaning it's likely Clinton "Juice" Granger will be pressed into duty.

"If the game was today, he wouldn't have played," said Rhule at his weekly press conference on Sept. 10. "When I made the decision [in August], we went with Connor because we thought we had something there. But we also thought 'Juice' had come a long way. He's started before, so I have complete confidence in Clinton if he goes."

The rundown

- Who: Fordham (2-0) at Temple (0-2)
- When: Sept. 14, 1 p.m.
- TV: ESPN3/WPHT

Rhule's pass-first philosophy won't change despite Granger's mobility.

"'Juice' is probably more of a runner than Connor," Rhule said. "Connor's a good athlete. Juice is an outstanding athlete. But our offense won't change with him in there. We're still gonna throw the football."

Turning "Juice" loose, though, hasn't meant much success in the past. In seven games last year (two starts), he threw for just 370 yards and two touchdowns, while rushing for 206 more.

Whoever starts for the Owls, the key will be focusing on beating Fordham.

"We control how we play," said Rhule, who tried to recruit Rams quarterback Michael Nebrich. "We have to get in the business of winning, rather than beating ourselves."

Clinging to past, looking at future

MLB. The Phillies have tough decisions to make on Jimmy Rollins and Freddy Galvis.

The backup quarterback is often popular. Whenever the starter falters, particularly in Philly, the chant for the reserve reverberates around town.

Freddy Galvis is the Phillies' version of the backup quarterback. Jimmy Rollins has slipped considerably offensively. He has struggled at the plate this season. Now that Galvis is back up and hitting (3-for-3 with a homer on Sept. 11 and 8-for-16 in his last four games heading into the Sept. 12 game against San Diego), count on fans chanting "Fred-dy, Fred-dy" during the rest of 2013.

Galvis is finally hitting.
GETTY IMAGES

"Freddy is showing [that he can hit] now," Ryne Sandberg said. "As long as he plays the game like he does, he can go a long way."

Galvis has the potential to be a starter. Former manager Charlie Manuel was enamored of his versatility and athleticism.

"Freddy has the chance to be a special player," Manuel said in spring training. "He's a heck of a fielder, and I believe he can become a better hitter."

Manuel compared Galvis to the brilliant shortstop Omar Vizquel, an exceptional fielder who became a solid hitter.

"It's possible that can happen," Manuel said. "The thing that's in Freddy's favor is that he's so young."

It's hard to believe but Galvis is only 23. He's been with the organization for eight years.

"He has a lot of talent," Kevin Frandsen said. "There's no doubt about that. He's about a good a fielder as you can be."

And then there is Rollins. The Phillies' lightning rod, who was NL MVP in 2007 and led the team to a world title the following year, has had a terrific career. When he hits home run No. 200, he'll be the 10th player in history with 200 homers and 400 stolen bases.

"Jimmy's accomplishments are undeniable," MLB analyst Larry Bowa said. "But he's had a tough time this season."

Bowa wonders what the future holds.

"Is Jimmy going to bounce back next year?," Bowa asked. "Will Galvis take another step in 2014?"

Woods in hunt at BMW tournament

Tiger Woods digs a shot out of the bunker Thursday, Sept. 12, at the BMW Championship in Lake Forest, Ill. Woods was among the first-round leaders (he was tied for third place) after carding a 5-under-par 71. Rory McIlroy won the golf tournament in 2012. / GETTY IMAGES

Sanchez likely out for year, needs surgery

Mark Sanchez's Jets career is likely over after he tore the labrum in his right shoulder.

Sanchez was injured Aug. 24 and missed Week 1. On Sept. 12, his doctor told ESPN that he would need surgery to repair his shoulder, likely ending his 2013 season. He was expected to make a final decision on whether to have surgery in the next day or two.

The Jets have already drafted his potential replacement, Geno Smith, so it seems unlikely he would return to the team in 2014. METRO

Allegations mount up on Oklahoma St.

The case against Oklahoma State's football program continues to build.

In Sports Illustrated's second installment of an investigative report, several players said drug use was rampant and drug dealers were often seen on campus.

Thirty players admitted to using marijuana and other drugs before and during games. This follows allegations of academic fraud and illegal payments.

Former coaches associated with Oklahoma State are denying the report. METRO

Seahawks, 49ers start trash-talking

San Francisco's Anthony Dixon has thrown the first punch.

As the 49ers and Seahawks get ready for their marquee matchup on Sept. 15, Dixon tweeted that he's been getting "less sleep preparing for these She-Hawks ..."

Seahawks linebacker K.J. Wright responded by writing, "Its gone be a long night for you and the forty whiners."

Both tweets have been deleted, but not before media outlets picked them up. The 49ers won the NFC West last season. METRO
